

A GIRL'S LETTER.

Miss Rose Hurst, 723 Harris Street, Appleton, Wis., Writes Something of Interest to All Women.

Read What She Says:

I WANT to say a word for Peruna for systemic catarrh and trust others who read this may try it and receive the same good from it that I did. I had been suffering for a long time and nothing seemed to do me any good, although I tried many doctors and many medicines. I had become so bad that there was no pleasure in living.

I was finally asked by a friend to try Peruna, which I did, with many misgivings. What was my delight after taking the first bottle, to see a great change for the better and I kept on improving until completely recovered.

I now feel like a new woman. It has done wonders for me and I gladly recommend it to others.

No ailing woman can fail to be interested in the above testimonial. Miss Hurst was persuaded by a friend to try Peruna, and she is now perfectly well and feels like another woman. Such is her story in brief.

ORCHARD'S RED PATH FURTHER LIGHTED UP

ways desired the removal of Stenroberg for his part in the north Idaho troubles.

Soon after Orchard left the stand, David Coates said: "I do not care at this time to discuss the statement made by Orchard. I will have an opportunity to reply when I go on the stand for the defense. You may say, however, that Stenroberg never talked to me on the subject of the kidnapping of the Paulson children. Orchard did not speak about it in Denver, but did come to me in Wallace, and outlined the plot."

He said he wanted to kidnap Paulson's children and get a bunch of money. I told him he was a fool and that if he attempted to do so, I would denounce him publicly and that he would be run out of Wallace. The story is absolutely untrue."

Coates served a term as lieutenant-governor of Colorado having been elected on the populist ticket. After leaving Colorado he went to Wallace and until a few weeks ago was proprietor of a newspaper there. He recently sold out.

Former Governor Peabody of Colorado, who will be a witness for the state, arrived at Boise tonight. Peabody declines to discuss the case at present preferring to wait until he is put on the stand.

Among other visitors arriving tonight is Governor Sheldon of Nebraska, who is accompanied by a large delegation of business men from Omaha. They are touring the state and were given a reception by the business men of Boise tonight.

BATHING IN THE DEAD SEA.

"No sooner has one plunged into the water than one is whipped off one's feet and goes bobbing helplessly about like a wretched cork," says the Rev. Barker Smith of bathing in the Dead Sea. "To the effort to regain one's footing and to get back to shore, one's feet and shirt are forced by the jagged stones and pebbles and when at length one does emerge from its treacherous bosom, with the lower limbs bleeding and torn, one becomes aware of a horrible tingling and burning sensation in eyes, ears, nostrils, mouth, and almost every pore of the skin, from the brine and bituminous which have penetrated everywhere."

"Unless great care is taken, the sufferer in the Dead Sea is liable to an eruption, which breaks out all over the body, and which is known as the 'Dead Sea rash.' The best antidote to this is to hurry across as quickly as possible to the River Jordan and take a second plunge therein. The soft and muddy waters of that sacred old dirty stream will effectually remove the salt that has increased the body."—Detroit Free Press.

RAIN CROWDED THE CHURCH.

Bishop Stanford of Colorado, at a dinner in Denver, said masses of Sabbath breaking. "I was talking to an eastern clergyman the other day about his church attendance. I suppose," I said, "that in your district rules affects the attendance considerably?" He smiled faintly. "Indeed, yes," he said. "I hardly have a vacant seat when it is too wet for golfing or motor-when."

HE DENOUNCED SCHMITZ HIS FORMER FRIEND RUEF

with Schmitz's consent and knowledge, that ends the case and there can be only one verdict rendered—guilty.

"These men were no common, clumsy extortioners. They were artists. One of them added to a naturally bright mind, a long legal career eventuating in political preeminence that made him the master of many men. The other—three times elected, mayor of the chief city of his native state. "Ah, San Francisco had been good to that man. Jurymen, San Francisco had done well by that man. San Francisco had the right to ask of him fairness and decency and integrity in his administration, and a full, frank and honest disclosure of all things when suspicion unhappily fell upon him. If, then, the very coins that jingled in his pockets were said to have been extorted from fallen women—in the very vehicle, the roads, about the city was declared to have been stolen—if he was accused, and went upon the stand to defend himself, and didn't tell what he knew, and tried to put his own silence on the shoulders of his lawyers, wouldn't you say he was guilty and that his attorneys knew it?"

"This case could not be stronger if Schmitz took the stand and confessed as Ruef has done. I don't care why Ruef says he is guilty in one breath and innocent in the next—I know he has pleaded guilty, and in this day and generation, turnmen, no man, especially a rich man, pleads guilty and bows down to shame and offers himself to a felon's stripes unless he is guilty. "This community in its every aspect is on trial. There is no need for us to boast of a sovereignty of the people if we are unable, when our public servants go wrong and commit crimes, for any reason or from any motives, to mete out punishment. In the last analysis it is up to you, my friends, and if you are unable to do your plain duty, the fault will be upon your heads and yours alone."

"I beg and pray you in this the last time, to do your duty when passing upon this man's crimes. Do it fearlessly; do it for this whole people of ours; do it for the community; do it that we may uplift our city. If but a little bit—that may be a little better under your administration and ours. Do it that San Francisco may survive if possible, that we may say to the world, that now points the finger of scorn at us: 'Although we have erred and our people done wrong, we have done the best we could to right it. And we are on the march again to a new, better and nobler San Francisco.' That is what I beg you to do on behalf of this prosecution."

As Johnson resumed his seat at the counsel table, Barrett, of the defense, whispered words of compliment in his ear.

"Very good of you, I'm sure," was the reply. Barrett began his speech to the jury at 2:40 and concluded a few minutes after six. He sorted, examined, exhibited and compared the great mass of detailed evidence, with skill and vigor, his deductions, often forceful, his logic at times incisive or persuasive as circumstances required.

Barrett exclaimed: "Yes San Francisco has been good to Schmitz; that's true, but Schmitz hasn't been good to Rudolph Spreckels. That's why we're here today, my friends."

His insinuation was that the mayor through the road of his reverses had turned down the city's friendship, which the defense maintains was sought by Spreckels and that the present bribery-graft investigation and prosecution is the implement of revenge.

"Honey," said Barrett in the course of his speech, "like Johnson is in the pay of that man, a private prosecutor whose wealth knows no limits who has lavished it on this prosecution as even men ever lavished wealth on a hobby before. What is this in Spreckels' estimation in this fight for political life and for fair dealing that should be pitted in virtue against Schmitz?"

Barrett was re-estimated by Judge Dunne, who said: "You must in your arguments remain within the evidence."

Barrett began a fast reply about the straying affield of the prosecution in that regard, but the court cut it short with a refusal to hear any answer at all.

The climax was an impassioned plea to the jury "not to be intimidated by the prosecution, its friends or a bitterly hostile press." Barrett said: "If you render a verdict of guilty, we'll not accuse you of having been bought to do it, we won't insinuate that some body slipped you a package of money. We'll believe you considered the defendant guilty and voted your honest belief. But I want you, gentlemen, not to be intimidated by Henry."

Barrett contended at length that nothing pointed more decisively to the innocence of the mayor than the fact, brought out on the witness stand, that he had not approached Police Commissioner Reagan with requests to hold up the licenses, but that in reality Reagan went with that suggestion to the ground, basing the suggestion on the ground that the French restaurants were immoral places.

He claimed that Ruef had testified under a "complete immunity understanding" with Henry and Burns "so cleverly arranged as to form, that Ruef could not put a finger on it or testify to it in court." He had to involve Schmitz. He is smothered under a hundred indictments, yet he stands here and was as flippant as the stand as a child at play around the Maypole.

"Do you believe he told the truth? Would you trust him? Don't you know this rich prosecution would sacrifice everything to get Schmitz, who has been their bitter enemy in every fair man's fight? Three times elected mayor of San Francisco and despairing of ever breaking him down in any other way, they would give immunity to every criminal in San Francisco in the next quarter of a century to get Schmitz. Don't you think they have given immunity to Ruef? Give us one clean witness; don't give us Reagan, who's got murder in his heart. Don't give us Ruef who has everything short of eternity to gain—Ruef, that unrepentant but convicted felon, who has sold out his friend, who would take his word against the word of Schmitz."

It is understood that former Judge Campbell, chief counsel for the mayor, will follow Barrett in the morning, closing for the defense and that Henry will close for the state. After that Judge Dunne will charge the jury, and the case will be submitted.

OPENING UP LANDS FOR HOME SEEKERS

How a Broad Area in Texas Has Been Converted From a Cattle Range Into Farms.

Chicago, June 12.—How the railroad revolutionizes socially and physically the country through which it passes, was never better shown than in the changes wrought by a 20-mile stretch of track from Stockdale to Cuero, Texas. This line traversing open country closed the gap on the Victoria division of the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railway between San Antonio and Cuero, and with the line from Cuero to Port Lavaca gives San Antonio a direct line to the Gulf. It also opens up an additional line between San Antonio and Houston by way of Stockdale, providing an additional link to the development of the entire coast country, which in the past decade has made wonderful progress.

But the change that has come over the country traversed by the Stockdale-Cuero extension is the most interesting feature of this sociological exhibit. The road opened for settlement a wonderfully fertile and productive section of the state, including portions of four counties. Until very recently the entire section traversed by the Victoria division of the G. H. and S. A., controlled by the Southern Pacific, was dominated absolutely by the cattle kings. The cheap fertile lands made accessible by the railroad, however, have proved too strong an incentive to be resisted by the home seeker, and in place of the seven towns that the latest maps show between Cuero and San Antonio, scores of prosperous communities are now established, many of them rapidly achieving modest distinction in trade.

Melon and vegetable culture and general crop growing are rapidly increasing, and toward the Gulf end of the line the sugar cane industry is making marked progress. Immediately following the recent opening of the Cuero-Stockdale line one-tenth of the country bordering upon it was thrown into cultivation, chiefly cotton. This agricultural development is slowly but surely displacing the cattle industry and making 50 homes grow where one existed in the days when vast cattle ranches occupied the country.

THE MUSICIANS BOLD IN THE DAYS OF OLD

Phoenix Men Who Had the Nerve to Disturb the Frontier With the Noise of Brass Instruments.

Think of Frank Kirkland, H. R. Patrick, Aaron Goldberg and Billy Blankenship, each armed with a tin horn, parading up Washington street playing, "I Want to Be an Angel" or "What Will the Harvest Be?" That is what an old timer said yesterday. He was thinking of an item printed in the Republican a few days ago about the first brass band Phoenix ever had, way back in the early seventies. There were sixteen members of it and the four gentlemen named are all who are still living in Phoenix, as far as the speaker could recall. They are none of them very old men now but they were considerably younger thirty years ago and the thing that makes the opening thought so incongruous is the fact that the channels of their lives have changed so much that if an up-to-date Phoenixian were to list all the population now in the order of their musical accomplishments these men would probably be found at the bottom of the list.

Not that they are devoid of musical talent or musical instincts but they have been so successfully hiding their lights under their respective bushels for the last twenty years that the public generally does not suspect that they could tell the difference between the note of a mocking bird and the marks on a Chinese laundry bill, gone to protest.

Yet those were great days, said one of the musicians yesterday. DeForest Porter was mayor of the city and the angel for the band. The money was raised to buy the instruments by paying the services of the band for six months in advance, for free concerts on Saturday nights, on the city plaza, which was then covered with a cottonwood grove. The citizens raised the money and the band made good. Every Saturday night after the concert the band serenaded the leading citizens and the stores (those who chipped in) and the saloons, which always opened a bottle of something.

Later on the band changed a little and another class of talented young members came in, such musical prodigies as W. B. Lunt and Col. J. H. McCluskey. About this time Mr. Patrick dropped out. The leader of the band, named Kelly, borrowed a fine new instrument he had and getting excited one night he slammed another man over the head with it, putting it out of business. Mr. Patrick had it repaired but he never afterward took the same lively interest in things musical. One thing after another changed the membership of the band until it was finally succeeded by the Pioneer organization.

It is suggested that these old time Southerners, whose blossoming hopes were withered by untoward circumstances, get together, borrow the Pioneer equipment some day and give a band concert just as an eye opener to the late comers who do not appreciate what the world has lost in the submerging of the genius of these "naught-have-beens."

THE VULTURE MINE TROUBLES ADJUSTED

Controversy Between Contesting Companies Settled by Merging of Interest in a New Company Known as the Midland Mining Co.

Advice has been received from the east to the effect that all differences have been adjusted between the parties contending for the ownership of the old Vulture mine, that they have consolidated their interest and have organized a new company to take over the property and sell at an early day begin active operations.

To make the situation clear it will be necessary to recount a little of the comparatively recent history of the mine. It was owned by a company known as the New Vulture Gold Mining Co. held and assigned of several previous managements that held it since the early days. The property was never patented and Charles King

CAPTURE OF A MURDERER.

On April 28 Juan Ribas was stabbed to death during a drunken brawl in a saloon in the south end of town. It was alleged that the crime was committed by one Abraham Lopez, who disappeared at the time, says the Tucson Citizen. The alleged murderer has been unheard of until today, when one of the eye witnesses to the murder saw him in town and at once notified Sheriff Pacheco, who captured the man and placed him in jail. Ribas was a Yaqui Indian, as is Lopez. The prisoner has the appearance of a dangerous man. He gave no resistance on being arrested, however, but his identity is undoubted. A preliminary hearing will be given the man this week. The police claim that the murder was done in absolute cold blood. The prisoner is a young man, less than 30 years of age. The capture was brought about through the release from jail two days ago of two witnesses of the crime, who had been held by the police as having more knowledge of it than they cared to tell. As soon as these two men got out of jail they hunted up the murderer and pointed him out to the sheriff.
